

DELAWARE AND HUDSON RAILWAY COMPANY

Schedule of Through Freight Trains

June 5, 1970

The Delaware and Hudson has only one product for sale to its customers - service. Good, dependable service will attract traffic to our line - poor, undependable service will drive it away.

Although these schedules are not guaranteed and are subject to change without notice, we must adhere to them and improve upon them to the extent practicable in order to satisfy customer requirements.

Railroad personnel are aware that there are various reasons why freight trains cannot always be operated exactly as scheduled. They realize that in some instances trains may be operated late or in advance of their schedules, depending on operating conditions. They know too that there will be days when certain scheduled trains will not be operated at all and that there will be days when extra trains will be operated in addition to scheduled trains.

While each employee must be constantly alert to the possibility of trains being operated at variance with the schedules, he must also do his part to assist in the overall effort to put trains into their final terminals on time or ahead of time to the extent practicable, so that the service via our through traffic routes will be maintained on a dependable basis.
